The Navy Department summarized official reports in this statement:

"Admiral Howard has wired from the United States ship San Diego that the Raleigh reports the Japanese cruiser Asama is aground on an uncharted shoal. He says there is no immediate danger. Admiral Howard should arrive on the scene on board the San Diego to-day."

Officials were reticent in discussing the international phases of the case arising from the fact that warships of the United States, a neutral nation, are alding the armed forces of a belligerent nation in waters foreign to the United States. The situation, it was said, was unique in international law. The shoal upon which the Asama is grounded is believed to be within the territorial waters of Mexico.
